

2018 Surge Fellow

As the oldest of 6 children, Tina Enagbare's introduction to talent management came early; when babysitting she often relied on her siblings' natural strengths and motivators to get them to help her with household chores. Her commitment to servant leadership also originates from her childhood experiences.

A passionate community-centered philanthropist, Tina serves as the Assistant Vice President, Talent for Peer Health Exchange, Inc., where she is responsible for leading all aspects of their talent function, including: talent acquisition/recruitment, retention, talent development, management of core HR processes and policies, leading on diversity, equity, & inclusion, and leading in the development and implementation of PHE's human capital strategy.

After several years in the for-profit sector with experience in Fortune 250 & consulting firms, Tina transitioned to the non-profit sector to fulfill her passion of empowering communities. Her passion for youth development, education, and creative expression ignited 14 years ago when she served as an Instructor for Temple Youth VOICES, a youth civic engagement program focused on education, teen leadership development, and collaborative research.

A native of Oakland (by way of Philadelphia), Tina earned a B.B.A from Temple University's Fox School of Business & Management in 2006 with a double concentration in International Business Administration and Human Resources Management. During this time she also completed international internships in South Africa & Italy focused on human resources strategy, international marketing, and cross-cultural engagement.

Tina currently serves on the Board of Directors for Lighthouse Community Public Schools. Tina loves bourbon, traveling, watching soccer, and listening to Prince. She's an occasional blogger and is most likely the only person you know still fiercely loyal to her Blackberry device.
